Isaac de Pinto (1717-1787):
An Enlightened Economist and Financier
José Luis Cardoso and António de Vasconcelos Nogueira

The name Isaac de Pinto does not appear as an entry in The New Palgrave: A Dictionary of Economics, which was published in 1987. The equivalent nineteenth-century dictionary dedicates just a few brief lines to Pinto to mention, with a certain air of disdain, that his main work "contains many sound and ingenious ideas, but he is rarely quoted except for the extravagance of his paradoxes" (Coquelin and Guillaumin 1854, 2: 405). A search for this author in the index of any manual or general work on the history of economic thought will prove fruitless, unless we include the inevitable footnote that Joseph Schumpeter (1954, 237) could not avoid making.

Pinto's main work, Traité de la circulation et du crédit, was originally published in 1771 in French and had a limited circulation. The subsequent editions were aimed at a very restricted public capable of
