Methodological note: The translations of important words are included in parenthesis. Still frames are linked to words in the text using squares that mark the position of relevant gestural strokes. The trajectories of gestures have been summarized using arrows. Contextual descriptions are included in brackets. Relevant parts of the text discussed in the argument are highlighted using italics.

- 1 C: There is something I wanted to ask you. I have been reading your thesis, which is very interesting and engaging and I found a phrase, a concept I did not understand and took my attention, which is time depth (profundidad temporal).
2 A: [Nods].
3 C: Does it sound familiar to you? You use it several times and A₂ [another archaeologist from the team] uses it.
4 A: Yes, more depth (profundidad) in time is more ancient (más antiguo). Ok?
5 C: Ok.

- 6 A: You go deeper (vas profundizando) in time.

- 7 A: Less depth in time is more recent (reciente).
8 C: Let me see if I understand you well. Going deeper in time, how is that?

- 9 A: That you go back (atrás) in time, that is more ancient (más antiguo).

- 10 A: The concept of depth is used as if... more... [reflecting pause]. It is also the case...[reflecting pause]. You can visualize it as in stratigraphy.
11 A: I don't know... It is supposed that in a properly arranged stratigraphy.

The central question this book seeks to explore is this: Are we trying to reconstruct a past in our own image, chained solely to our own. It is an exploration and evaluation of conceptual categories, of great significance to archaeology, which are nevertheless often neglected - age.
